

Follow these instructions to find the right product.

For the drip tray to function properly, it's important that you select the correct one. If you choose a drip tray that doesn't have the right depth, there's a risk of condensation water seeping under the drip tray. This could lead to water damage. Here's how to measure to choose correctly:

1. MEASURE THE CABINET CORRECTLY:

Depth

Measure from the back of the cabinet to the front of the cabinet when the cabinet door is open. If it's an integrated one, the door thickness should be included in the depth measurement.

Three important things to consider:

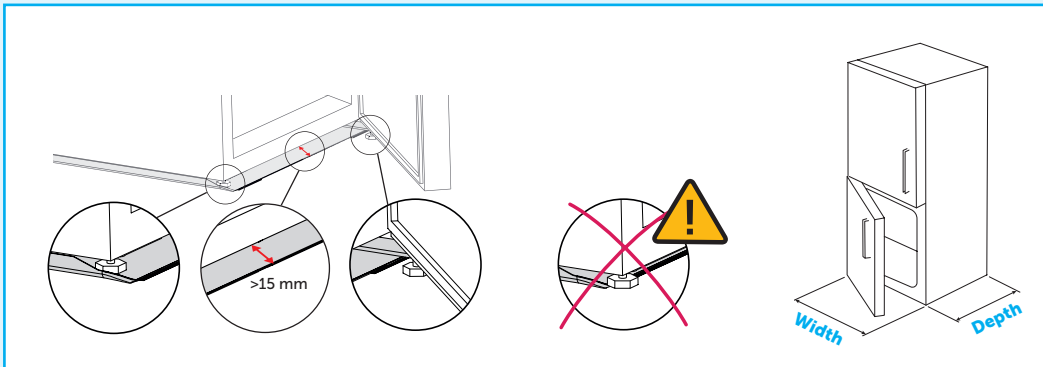

- The drip tray should protrude at least 15 mm when the door is open so that condensation water from inside the fridge can run down onto the drip tray and not seep under it.

- It's important that the cabinet's feet are completely on, or outside, the drip tray and not on its front edge.

Width

Measure the width as shown in the picture.
